suffering as they do. Most fat people are so good-natured they do not care how they look or how they get along during the hot weather. As a matter o fact there is a natural fat reducer that in the past several years has been demonstrating that it will reduce fat and not tear down the body or least big, flabby rolls of skin and wrinkles This method is the famous Marmola prescription, which is now prepared in tablet form to meet the demands of fat people in the summer and to enable them at all times to take their fat reducer after each meal. One of these little tablets taken after a meal turns that meal into good food for the blood and stops all fat-producing elements from going into the system, Marmola Tablets has an army of men and women who testify to its success, and you would tire reading what they say of its triumphs, Mar-mola tablets not only stop producing fat in the body but they reduce flesh at the rate of from 12 to 15 ounces a day. They are harmless and do nothing but assist nature to give to the body the They are sold nourishment it requires. at all drug stores, price 75 cents, or you may write The Marmola Company, 737 Farmer Bidg., Detroit, Mich.

It will mean a concentration of forces in the fight being waged with the many enemies of the merchant.

It was decided at a meeting of merchants at the chamber of commerce Wednesday afternoon, occasioned by the visit of James Breen, organizer and secretary of the state association. Those present adopted resolutions of affiliation with the state and national organiza-There were no questions raised as to the great advantage of such ac tion, an advantage to El Paso as a city and El Paso as a merchant, but the ever present insurance question was injected with great venom on its being men-tioned incidentally by the visitor.

El Pasonns Are Praised. After taking a few sharp raps at El Paso's lack of cooperation with the rest of Texas, and at the same time praising El Paso's vigor, Mr. Breen outlined his subject briefly and well. Mentioning El Paso at the Elk's convention in Philadelphia, the Taft-Diaz meeting, and the ommittee of El Pasoans who attended the rating board hearing at Austin, the speaker said that the state association Wanted El Paso and its workers. predicted that El Paso will double in opulation within 10 years, and that coporation is the means to all ends

"Two rating bureaus are not successful in one city. Our associations locate the dead beats through a simple system of inquiry blanks." In regard to that In regard to that system, the speaker mentioned the operations of two Chicago men, who, he says, have been working in eastern Texas with good results to themselves. "Cooperation is the most effective system," said H. D. Slater, "and I consider the propocition very desirable. It is not so much the money as the feel-

Mutual Insurance Discussed. In regard to the work of the state asociation, Mr. Breen mentioned that a committee had ben appointed at the last meeting to investigate the advisability of organizing a state mutual fire insurance company. The speaker asked that the meeting, in view of El Paso's interest in the questions, pass resolutions of good will. That set the ball rolling. Richard D. AUTO ORDINANCE Motor Cycle Officer Munroe Says New Regulations

Automobile policeman Munroe, the man who throws a scare into the joy riders whenever they attempt to fracture the speed ordinance, has two suggestions to make for the revision of the present ordinance applying to automobile and motorcycles. Policeman Munroe says that there should be a clause in the ordinance prohibiting the notorcyclists from cutting out the mufflers on their machines and making as much noise as a small sized Gattling gun while running through the downtown streets. This is not only an unnecessary annoyance, he says, but is also a menace to persons driving horses which are liable to become frightened at the popping of the mo-

The other clause which the motorcycle officer thinks should be incorperated in the statutes governing the use of autos in the city limits, is that he users of the strong calcium headlights should be required to screen them or extinguish them while running through the city streets.

These brilliant lights, he says, are blinding to passing traffic which may be on the same street with the auto carrying the light. Instead of burning the bright light while inside the city limits, Munroe says the oil lights should be used to prevent confusion on the

Other cities have these restrictions, he says, and should be added to the present ordinance.

NO word was spoken during this cautions, extraordings cautious, extraordinary voyage underground. The pseudo Julius supported his charge in the stern of the boat. Peter Brutus sat in the bow, a revolver in his hand, his gaze bent upon the opaqueness ahead.

At last the boat crept out into the rainy, starless night. He drew the skirts of his own mackintosh over her shoulders and head. The night was so inky black that one could not see his hand before his face.

At least two of the occupants opened up their throats and lungs and gulped in the wet, fresh air.

It was now that he began to wonder, to calculate against the plans of their sllent escort. Whither were they bound? The occasional creak of an oar, a whispered oath of dismay, the heavy breathing of tollers, the soft blowing of the mist-that was all; no other sound on the broad, still river.

Truxton began to chafe under the strain. His uneasiness was increased by the certain conviction that before long they would be beyond the city. the walls of which were gradually slipping past. He considered their chances if he were to overturn the frail boat and strike out for shore in the darkness

This project he gave up at once. He did not know the waters or the banks between which they glided. They were past the walls now and rowing less stealthly. Before long they would be in a position to speak aloud. It would be awkward for him.

Suddenly the boat turned to the right and shot toward the unseen bank. They were perhaps half a mile above the city wall. Truxton's mind was working like a triphammer. He was recalling a certain nomad settlement north of the city, the quarters of fishermen, poachers and horse traders. These people, he was not slow to surmise, were undoubtedly hand in glove with Marianx, if not so surely connected with the misguided committee of ten.

He had little time to speculate on the attitude of the denizens of this unwholesome place. The prow of the boat grated on the pebbly bank, and Peter Brutus leaped over the edge into the shallow water.

"Come, on Julius-hand her over to me!" he cried. As he leaned over the side to seize the girl in his arms Truxton King ready had stolen through these gates brought the butt of the heavy revolver down upon his skull. Brutus dropped across the gunwale with a groan, dead to all that was to happen in the next half hour or more.

Truxton's eyes had grown used to the darkness; he could see the men quite plainly. "What are you doing?"

he demanded of Loraine, who, behind him, was fumbling in the garments of the HANDS UP! QUICK!" unconscious Brufus.

HE CRIED. "Getting his revolver," she replied, with a quaver in her voice.

"Good!" he said exultantly. "Let's think a minute," he went on. "We don't dare turn these fellows loose, a crowd after us in two minutes." "We'll keep the boat. There! Now push off, Newport." For King had recognized his guard in the witch's hovel in the person of one of the oars-"What the devil"- began Newport, but King silenced him. The boat slowly drifted out into the current. "Now row?" he commanded. With his free hand he reached back and dragged the limp Brutus into the boat,

"Gad, I believe he's dead!" he muttered. "Can you swim?" demanded King. "Not a stroke," gasped Newport. "Good Lord, pal, you're not going to right. I'm going to land you on the opposite shore."

Two minutes later they ran up under the western bank of the stream, which at this point was fully 300 yards wide. Under cover of the deadly revolver the two men dropped into the water, which was above their waists. The limp form of Peter Bru-

> "Good night," called out Truxton King cheerily. He had grasped the oars.

"I'll row over to the east side," announced King to the girl, "but I don't like to get too close to the walls. Some one may have heard the shouts of our friends back there."

Not another word passed between them for ten or twelve minutes. She peered anxiously ahead, looking for signs of the barge dock, which lay somewhere along this section of the At last the sound of rapidly working rowlocks came to the girl's ears. "They're after us," grated Truxton in desperation. "They've got word to friends one way or another. By Jove. I'm nearly fagged too! I can't pull much farther. Hello! What's this?"

The side of the boat caromed off a solid object in the water, almost spilling them into the wind blown river. "The docks!" she whispered. "We struck a small scow, I think. Can you find your way in among the coal barges?" He paddled along slowly, feeling his way, scraping alongside the big barges which delivered coal from the distant mines. At last he found an opening and pushed through. A moment later they were riding under the stern of a broad cargoless barge, plumb up against the water lapped piles of the Standing in the bow of the boat, he managed to pull himself up over the slippery edge. It was the work of a second to draw her up after him. He gave the boat a mighty shove, sending it out into the stream once more.

In a few minutes loud curses came from the river, proclaiming the fact that the pursuers had found the empty boat. Afterward they were to learn that Newport's shouts had brought a boat load of men from the opposite bank, headed by the innkeeper, in whose place Loraine was to have encountered Marianx later on, if plans had not miscarried.

By this time King had located the open space which undoubtedly afforded room for the transfer of cargoes from the dock to the company's yards inside the walls. Without hesitation he drew her after him up this wide, sinister roadway. The pursuers were trying for a landing, noisily, even boisterously, It struck Truxton as queer that these men were not afraid of alarming the watchmen on the docks or the man at the gate above. Suddenly it came to him that there would be no one there to oppose the landing of the miscreants. No doubt hundreds of men alduring the night, secreting themselves

tus was pulled out and transferred to | in the fastnesses of the city, ready for the morrow's fray.

They rushed up the narrow rallway chutes and through one of the numerous gateways that opened out upon the barge docks. No one opposed them. No one was standing guard. From behind came the sound of rushing footsteps. Lightning flashed in the sky, and the rumble of thunder broke over the desolate night.

"They'll see us by the lightning." gasped Truxton, almost ready to drop from faintness and exhaustion, Following a vivid flash of lightning, two shots were fired by the men who were now plunging up through the gates, a hundred yards or more away. The same flash of lightning showed to King the narrow, muddy street that stretched ahead of them. Instead of doing the obvious thing he turned sharply to the left, between the lines of freight cars. Their progress was

At last they came to the end of their rope. They were literally up against the great city wall.

A car door stood open in front of them. He waited for a second flash of lightning to reveal to him the nature of its interior. It was quite empty. Without hesitation he clambered in and pulled her up after him. They fell over on the floor, completely fag-

A few minutes later the storm broke. He managed to close the door against the driving terrents. "We've fooled them," he managed to whisper close to her ear. "They won't look here. You're safe, Loraine. Gad, I'd like to see any one get you away from me now!"

She pressed his arm. Then she was fast asleep.

He sat with his back against the stoic of the car, a pistol in one hand, the other lying tenderly upon the drenched hair of the girl whose head rested upon his leg. She had slipped down from his shoulder. He did not have the desire or the energy to prevent it. Manfully as he had fought against the impelling desire to sleep, he could not beat it off. His last waking thought was of the effort he must make to reach Dangloss with the warning.

Something stirred in the far end of the car-a still small noise as of something alive that moved with the unmost wariness. A heavy, breathing body crept stealthily across the intervening space, so quietly that a mouse could have made but little less noise. An instant later the bluish flame of
